Meeting the challenges of Agriculture and Forestry with Commissioner Bob Odom

Popularity of American alligator hides and skins is on the rise with exports reaching an all-time high in 1999 when more than 180,000 hides and skins were exported, Commissioner of Agriculture and Forestry Bob Odom said.

"We are pleased with the results of the 1999 study and are making great strides to ensure continued sales growth both domestically and internationally," Odom added.

The Market Development Office of the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry conducts an export study every year to ascertain which countries are importing American alligator hides and skins, and how many they are buying. The study is based on raw data collected by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service from exporters.

The numbers show that in 1999 total exports from the United States accounted for 184,189 hides and skins worth $17.9 million. The total value of exports increased 31 percent over 1998, and units exported increased 29.5 percent.

The study also found that for the second consecutive year, the majority of all American alligator hides and skins went to the European nations of France and Italy. The two countries accounted for 72.5 percent of the exports. Mexico continues to be the fastest growing export market taking 14,987 hides and skins in 1999. Singapore and Panama are steadily increasing the numbers they import.

Although most markets are expanding and buying more products than ever before, the Japanese market went from importing 800 hides and skins worth $91,572 in 1998 to zero in 1999. Roy Johnson, director of market development for the department, attributes the decline to the country's dwindling tanning industry.

"The Japanese tanning industry has fallen from about 16,000 skins in 1995 to zero last year. The industry is dying out because of urban pressures, the economic situation and a lack of interest in the industry by the younger generation," Johnson noted.

To continue to open new international markets and expand existing ones, the department is combining resources with the Florida Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services and the Southern United States Trade Association, SUSTA, to promote American alligator hides, skins and finished products at five events over the next nine months.

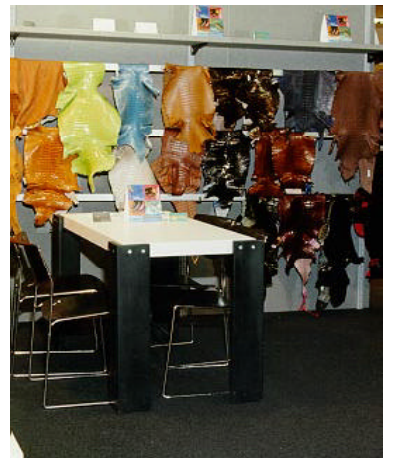

"We can get a lot more done and tell a consistent story if everyone is on the same page. Instead of Louisiana alligators fighting for market share against Florida alligators, we're both out there trying to penetrate the market with American alligator products," Johnson said.

The five events where American alligator products will be promoted are: Material World, a trade show held in Miami attended by fashion designers, manufacturers and leading retailers; Tag Leather Supplier Show, part of the International Fashion Fabric Exhibition in New York; The Pan American Leather Fair, the second largest leather event in the world held in Miami; ANPIC, a show held in Mexico attended by leather and footwear manufacturers; and the International Fashion Boutique Show, a finished-product show in New York attended by leading and small retail store buyers and owners.

"Based on the number of alligators we harvest in this state, we can say with great confidence that Louisiana alligators make up 70 to 75 percent of all the American alligators harvested each year," Odom said. "With that amount coming from our state, we must continue to build on these important international markets by expanding our alligator promotions."

New help arrives in monitoring crawfish imports

Louisiana's crawfish industry received another weapon in its ongoing battle to keep local crawfish competitive with crawfish being imported from China, according to Commissioner of Agriculture and Forestry Bob Odom.

A federal regulatory committee recently approved adding a new designation to federal tariff schedules specifically for peeled crawfish tail meat.

"In the past crawfish tail meat coming into this country was lumped in with the broad category of 'Other Crustaceans' under shellfish," Odom said. "The problem is that a lot of crawfish was coming in disguised as 'Other' and in many cases not subject to the tariff that is supposed to be paid on peeled tail meat.

"Now when crawfish tail meat is imported it must be identified as such and is not thrown into the catch-all category of 'Other.' It may seem like a small difference, but we know there have been repeated attempts to get around the tariff.

"Now we can track exactly how much peeled crawfish tail meat is on the market against how much is listed as crawfish tail meat on U.S. Customs import forms. If there is a discrepancy it will become obvious and Customs can back track it to the source and take appropriate action against the importing company," Odom said.

For nearly a decade through the late 1980s and into the 1990s, Louisiana's crawfish industry faced ruin as millions of pounds of Chinese crawfish were dumped in Louisiana at below cost of production prices.

Louisiana crawfishermen hired a law firm from Washington D.C. specializing in international trade that took the legal fight to the U.S. Department of Commerce and the International Trade Commission.

In 1997 the two agencies ruled that illegal dumping was taking place and agreed to place a tariff on all foreign crawfish tail meat imported into the United States.

Although the Chinese do not like and do not eat crawfish, in the 1980s they established a crawfish farming industry and began exporting crawfish to this country, principally into Louisiana, for sale at less than half the cost of U.S. crawfish.

The imports led to an 80 percent reduction in the sale of Louisiana tail meat and some 60 Louisiana crawfish processing businesses were either closed or had their operations severely curtailed.

As a result of the legal intervention the federal agencies determined that the Chinese product was being dumped in the U.S. and slapped a hefty federal tariff on all imported product. Currently the tariff is at 201 percent and is subject to periodic review to determine its adequacy.
